Linguists and lexicographers have long been suspicious of isoglosses. They are a convenient, graphic result of the data, but they are an abstraction far removed from the data. They overgeneralize. And they overparticularize, as dividing lines tend to do: Dialects rarely change suddenly; they change gradually and continually. Isoglosses may not be “wrong,” but they operate at one scale, and dialect can be observed at various scales. Cassidy avoided isoglosses and mapped his data quite differently from linguistic atlases: “DARE’s regional areas inductively discovered do not have sharp outlines but thin out at the edges or merge with other features. The core of a regional area shows frequent or concentrated usage—on DARE maps, close clusters of responses. Thus clustering is taken as the measure of regionality.” Someone unexpectedly confronted with a DARE map would not immediately recognize it as a map of the United States. The size of the states is determined by population and settlement history, “hence the informant distribution, which is relevant to language use as mere area is not.” DARE literally reconfigures America as no other dialect geography had ever dared to do.

The maps depend on a pioneering use of computers. As Cassidy wrote, “The planners of DARE had realized from the first that the mass of data would be large and that computer processing must be considered. In 1965, however, though numerical computing was well advanced, the handling of alphabetic material was only beginning.” Cassidy was perhaps the first lexicographer to integrate computation fully into a dictionary project’s production process, first and foremost to manage and manipulate data efficiently and effectively. His example, and his willingness to share his experience with others, has been influential, to say the least: It initiated changes in lexicography and in the methods of humanities research more generally.

Cassidy quickly realized that computers have other than alphabetic uses. Computers easily generate graphic displays with as many fields as necessary into which a dot can be inserted to indicate a particular word or phrase used by an informant. If all informants used a word, there would be a dot in every field, but where usage varies with dialectal synonyms, only certain fields would be filled. With the power of the computer at hand, Cassidy wrote in 1977, “one can display in a few seconds the distribution of any response—a mapping capacity which one would never attempt by manual methods because it would be intolerably tedious and slow.” As a result, the collection of DARE maps presents us with a much more fine-grained account of American regional words and phrases than any previous dialect geography and a more accurate visual account of their distribution.

But even more effective mapping cannot quite bring linguistic geography down to a human scale. As Louise Pound concluded, “Workers for the American Atlas record with scholarly vigilance the speech of the regions they canvass, endeavoring to preserve faithfully for posterity our twentieth-century regional distinctions; yet their results are no substitute for an exhaustive dialect dictionary.” That is because, as Jacob Grimm put it, “every word has its history and lives its own life,” a sentiment that leads inevitably to a historical dictionary. As Cassidy acknowledged, “It should be obvious that the model for DARE was the Oxford English Dictionary, with some innovations, chiefly the use of maps and oral data specially gathered throughout the country in a single five-year period.” The modesty of “some innovations” belies the importance of the maps and oral data.

The typical DARE entry includes elements one finds in all historical dictionaries: variant forms and alternate spellings; pronunciations, when they aren’t transparent; etymologies, when they can be responsibly proposed; definitions and quotations starting with the first known recorded use of the term. Labels describe distribution; for instance, bank barn in the sense of “a barn built into the side of a hill, affording entrance on at least two levels” is labeled “chiefly, PA, OH, MD, VA, IN. See Map.” For bank barn, the map shows outliers in New York, Illinois, Missouri, and Minnesota. Only five informants in Indiana supplied bank barn; west of Ohio, use of it “thins out.”

Another feature that sets DARE apart is its unprecedentedly pluralist approach to evidence. The OED and some related dictionaries rely almost exclusively on quotations from printed texts. Their entries have a certain sheen; differences among sources are subtle. In the English Dialect Dictionary, Wright relied on material collected by the English Dialect Society and his own field research, but not on printed sources. While the texture of entries in Wright’s dictionary is different from that of OED entries, it similarly offers readers a “smooth” reading experience.

By contrast, DARE entries have a homespun texture, demanding more of a reader, who must reconcile various types of information in order to understand what DARE has to say about a word or phrase. But if they pay attention, readers come away marvelously informed. A DARE entry might include any combination of quotations from regional literature, diaries, small-town newspapers, material from WELS, the various linguistic atlases (published and unpublished), other accounts of dialect in scholarly literature, substantial personal collections donated to the project by scholars at the ends of their careers (like the Gordon Wilson collection, from which DARE illustrated dew poison), and, of course, questionnaire responses, identified by informant, so that the curious reader can refer to the “List of Informants” to discover his or her community, community type, year of birth, level of education, occupation, sex, and race—all types of information that can be overlooked in other historical dictionaries, but not in a twenty-first-century dictionary of American regional English.

DARE is a bold synthesis of linguistic atlas and historical dictionary. Until Cassidy proposed to do it, no one had imagined such a work; until it was published, many sociolinguists and lexicographers doubted Cassidy could bring it off. But when the first volume appeared, it was a revelation. As Walt Wolfram wrote in American Speech in 1986, “As ambitious a task as DARE has been, the first volume has exceeded expectations. I say this, not as a party-line ADS member who feels constrained to give a loyal endorsement, but as a repentant skeptic who more than once wondered if this long-promised work would ever be delivered . . . seeing the scope of the entries, I now understand why it was so long in the making.”

In DARE, Cassidy reconceived dialectology and simultaneously introduced a new variety of historical dictionary. It was, perhaps, a typically American improvisation, or an example of New World unconventionality aimed at Old World canons of authority. What seemed a revelation in 1985 will seem no less so next March, when the promise of DARE is fulfilled by publication of its final volume. Scholars of American language, history, and culture will rely on it, and they will enjoy it as much as lay readers. DARE teaches us about American regional speech, of course. It also teaches us to think big, put aside assumptions, draw on traditions when useful, and make things new. It says to us: Whatever transformative project in the humanities you may have in mind, dare to do it.

NEH has been supporting the Dictionary of American Regional English since 1976, when the project was awarded a $567,684 grant. Since July 2001, DARE has received six grants, totaling $3.45 million, in support of volumes four and five.

DARE Editors Celebrate with HUP Colleague

While in Boston for the 2013 American Dialect Society meeting, Joan Hall and Luanne von Schneidemesser met Harvard University Press Editorial Manager David Foss for lunch to celebrate the publication of the sixth and final print volume of DARE.

For most of DARE’s history, David has collaborated with Luanne on the publication details unique to this project. His assistance with Volume VI was especially valuable, as developing the formatting and design for a supplemental volume presented new challenges for everyone involved. David’s calm, easygoing manner facilitated the communication among DARE, the Press, and the typographers.

DARE Editor Addresses Dialect Society

As outgoing President of the American Dialect Society, Luanne von Schneidemesser gave the luncheon address at the Society’s annual meeting in Boston in January. She talked about “Bubblers, Schnibbles, Lawyers, and Cheeseheads: Linguistic Outreach. The Wisconsin Idea.” Luanne also presented Presidential Honorary Memberships to three graduate students nominated by ADS members. The recipients were Paul Reed, University of South Carolina (pictured below), Janneke Van Hofwegen, Stanford University, and Shelly Swearinger, University of Michigan.

Director of Development

Spring is in the air, bringing with it memories of my first DARE Board of Visitors meeting almost seven years ago. I had just started at the University of Wisconsin Foundation and was delighted to learn that I would be representing this project. It has been a pleasure and an honor to work with DARE’s dedicated board members, generous supporters, and fine staff. Joan Hall has been a tremendous partner in securing funding for this scholarly gem, and I’ve enjoyed our many strategy sessions and successes along the way.

A recent promotion for me at the UW Foundation means that I will be passing the reins to an eager and able colleague, Toni Drake. She will be a valuable ally, working on funding for the digital edition and securing gifts for the crucial ongoing updates of the Dictionary. To make a tax-deductible donation to DARE by check or credit card, please use the coupon below. If you have any questions or would like information about making a gift of securities, real estate, or appreciated property, please contact Toni at <toni.drake@supportuw.org> or (608) 263-1658. ♦

Longtime DARE Staffers Retire

We take this opportunity to bid farewell to longtime colleagues Elizabeth Blake (who retired in December) and Luanne von Schneidemesser (who is retiring this spring).

Proofreader Elizabeth Blake joined the DARE staff in 1988. She came to the project with an MA in English Language and Linguistics from the University of Chicago and a wealth of editorial experience, having worked as an editorial assistant for the Assyrian Dictionary, Assistant Editor of the Journal of the American Dietetic Association, a manuscript editor for Wisconsin Trails, and a freelance editor for numerous magazines and publishers in the Midwest. This background prepared her well to tackle the intricate process of coding, formatting, and proofreading DARE entries. None of us will forget Blake’s meticulous attention to detail or her fondness for bad puns and good food (especially chocolate); her culinary creations were a highlight of every office birthday party or holiday celebration.

Luanne von Schneidemesser has been with the Dictionary since 1979. She first heard about the project while completing her dissertation at UW–Madison, when a fellow grad student showed her a newspaper ad for an editorial position. Her Ph.D. in German Philology and Linguistics and her experience as a fieldworker for the Wortatlas der deutschen Umgangssprachen made her an ideal candidate for the job. She began as an Editor, writing entries full-time, and went on to become Senior Editor for Production, supervising the production staff, overseeing DARE’s increasing use of computer technology, and working closely with Harvard University Press and our typographers to publish six volumes, coordinating a myriad of tasks (including the production of DARE’s distinctive maps).

The professional honors Luanne has received and the articles she has published are too numerous to list here. Named a Fellow of the Dictionary Society of North America in 2009, she recently completed a term as President of the American Dialect Society. In 2011 the University of Wisconsin–Madison awarded her the title of Distinguished Scientist. Even in retirement, Luanne has no intention of leaving the field of lexicography; she is the current Vice President of the Dictionary Society of North America and plans to co-author a book about Wisconsin words. ♦

Uh-oh! We got our data mixed up! Help us sort it out! For each of these questions, one of the three DARE Informant responses belongs to a different question in this quiz. Figure out which one it is and write the correct question number on the line in front of it. Send answers along with your name and address to Julie Schnebly, 6119 Helen C. White Hall, 600 N. Park St., Madison, WI 53706. Your answers must reach us by May 15. If we receive more than one quiz with all the correct answers (or have a tie for the highest number of correct answers), we’ll break the tie with a drawing. The winner will receive a signed copy of Volume VI, which includes these answers and many more ear-catching responses from the original DARE fieldwork. An answer key will appear in our next Newsletter and on our website, dare.wisc.edu. Good luck, and have fun!
